

SANDRA L. SAVAGE, D.O.

Originally from the prairie state of Nebraska where she grew up on a farm, Dr. Savage attended the University of Nebraska, Lincoln. She finished her undergraduate work at the University of Nebraska, Omaha and lived and worked in Omaha with her husband for many years.

She attend the University of Osteopathic Medicine and Health Sciences In Des Moines, Iowa, earning her doctorate in 1991. Residency took her and hubby to the Twin Cities of Minnesota. Hubby continued his career in television news as a photojournalist.

After residency Dr. Savage began practicing Emergency Medicine at various rural hospitals around the Twin Cities area. In 2008 the harsh Minnesota winters finally became too much to bear and she and family relocated to the Commonwealth of Kentucky where she has practiced since.

The move to Kentucky allowed Dr. Savage and her husband to expand their alpaca and llama farm, working on breeding and showing championship animals and producing yarns, rovings that are sold at knitter and crocheter conventions and through their farm's website.

In total Dr. Savage has practiced full time Emergency Medicine for 22 years. Now in 2018, she begins a new chapter with her entrée at PMC practicing Urgent Care Medicine. Throughout her career Dr. Savage has worked hard to stay true to a philosophy of practicing "gold standard" medicine and is known as a sharp diagnostician. Along with her farm interests she is also an accomplished musician, playing in many ensembles with her hubby over the years. Dr. Savage looks forward to serving and working with the community in La Grange, KY at PMC Urgent & Primary Care.
